INTRODUCTION

The glossary here presented was undertaken at the suggestion of the late Dr. Strachan and his friend, Dr. J. Gwenogvryn Evans, both of whom felt very keenly the inadequacy of existing Dictionaries and the sore need of reliable information concerning the value of a large number of words in Mediæval Welsh. Apart from Dr. Kuno Meyer's complete glossary to the text of 'Peredur ab Evrauc,' and the short but interesting glossary by Canon Robert Williams to 'Y Seint Greal,' no effort had lately been made to collect material for a lexicon of Mediæval Welsh and each scholar had to toil for himself. Dr. Gwenogvryn Evans very generously supplied me with an advance copy of his forthcoming facsimile of the 'Black Book of Chirk' when the original MS. was jealously guarded at Peniarth, and Dr. Strachan did all he could to put me on the right path to win from my text the greatest amount of information and of experience in research. At first, it was intended to rely mainly, if not solely, upon the 'Black Book of Chirk' for means to establish the value of the words and terms employed in it, and this had already been finished before death so unexpectedly took Dr. Strachan away from us. We realised, however, that this was only beginning the work; and it was decided to extend the scope of it very considerably and to treat the text as a part of Mediæval Welsh literature—seeking to explain some of its many enigmas by means of other texts in prose and poetry, without disdaining to use even Modern Welsh and colloquial forms when nothing else availed.

The new task, though immeasurably more interesting, has also turned out to be much more difficult than I had foreseen, and in moments of despair, when besieged by crowding difficulties or exasperated because the lawyers gave more thought to folk-etymology than to law, I often wished I had chosen some other task for my apprentice hand; for the more difficulties I thought I had solved the more remained to worry me. The need, however, was so great, that even at the risk of blundering oft and badly it was worth the trouble to arrange the words of this earliest vernacular law-text in alphabetical order and bring together as many pertinent quotations as possible from other texts.

The Manuscript, as such, I leave to the experienced and learned Editor to describe and appraise. Suffice it to say that for the purpose of this glossary the 'Black Book of Chirk' means Peniarth MS. 29<sup>1</sup> with the lacunæ filled from the British Museum Addl. MS. 14931<sup>2</sup> which Dr. Evans regards "as a direct transcript, in Dimetian orthography, of Peniarth MS. 29." This Peniarth MS. 29 is written in a bewildering orthography, and I have not been able to devise an hypothesis to account for its peculiarities. If the scribe was a foreigner, as suggested, it is not clear to me how an alien could be such a master of faultless syntax, but on the other hand, how a native could be such a bungler in orthography is beyond my power to explain. His greatest originality is seen in his treatment of ch, th, dd and h—ch is represented by c, cc, ch, ck, gh, h; th by th, dh, t, d, h, s; dd by th, dh, dt, t, d,

1. see Report on MSS. in the Welsh Language, I. p. 359.

2. ibid. Vol. II. p. 944.

h irrespective of position, and h is used also without any apparent regard for custom, accent, or etymology.

Another difficulty that faced me at the outset was, what value to set on the Latin Codices of Welsh Laws, and to what extent they were to be trusted. Dr. Evans had suggested that the Laws were originally codified in Latin<sup>1</sup> while the authors of the 'Welsh People' infer that the Latin text was a translation.<sup>2</sup> Reverence for authority paralysed me. After a while I could not withstand the growing conviction that the Latin Laws as we have them are a patchwork, and in parts demonstrably translations from the Welsh. This is not the place for an exhaustive treatment of this subject but one or two points may be noted. In defining the perquisites of the court janitor the text says—e lludyn a del yr porth kudha [e porthaur] beuuyt 26. 6. This is not a chance gratuity, but a fixed part of his wages which was his by right of law. Out of every herd of swine brought in after a raid he was to have one which he could lift by the bristle as high as his hip; so likewise he is to have one cwttā from every herd of cattle driven in after a successful raid.

But if cwttā meant 'bobtailed' as it generally does, I imagine that the janitor would often be without his share, unless he entered into a conspiracy with one of the raiders to improve upon niggard nature. One of the translators thought, not unnaturally, that the word cwttā could only mean 'bobtailed,' or 'tail-less' and translated it 'sine cauda'<sup>3</sup>; another knew better and translated it as 'ultimum.'<sup>4</sup>

Another word which points unmistakeably the same

3. Ancient Laws, II. 765. vi.

4. ibid II. 762. vii.

way is enhorob (see under hanerhob). According to Dr. Pughe this word means 'a flitch of bacon.' Aneurin Owen translates it so in the Ancient Laws<sup>1</sup> and the translation is confirmed in 'Mediæval Law.'<sup>2</sup> But according to the tale of Math son of Mathonwy in the Red Book, the term means a 'pig.' The Latin Laws give the two meanings of 'a flitch of bacon' and 'a three year old pig' (see glossary). The word was perhaps confined to the dialect of Dyved and the translator who translated it as 'perna salsa' attempted what appeared to him a literal translation. Several other instances will be found in the glossary shewing that the Latin Laws are in part, at any rate, a translation and a mosaic.

There was another difficulty that beset me at every step, how far was I justified in pitting reasonable scepticism against the definition of obscure words by lawyers who had a lurking sympathy with folk-etymology. There are abundant instances of this in the glossary, but let two suffice. The word briduw is used often to describe the most solemn oath known at the time. In some late codices long definitions are given, and it is almost impossible to avoid the conclusion as expressed in the glossary of "Mediæval Law," p. 328, that "the term seems to be simply bri Duw, dignity of God." I have little doubt, however, that it was, at first, meant to describe a solemn oath taken 'pro Deo.' Another instructive instance is the treatment of the expression maen dros iaen. It has always, I believe, been translated 'a stone over ice' and there is a late text which seems to support this; but in the light of the quotations brought together in the glossary it will be seen that nothing could be further from it. I hope to find some means of fixing more definitely the import of maen and iaen but I believe that maen means 'lord' and that maenawl is a compound of it meaning the 'land under dominion of a lord.' This process of delusion is well shown in the series addaw mab addaw maen quoted under maen. Long definitions are given of many a word in scattered texts, investing the delusion with MS. authority and sending it forth on its career of deceit.

1. Ancient Laws, I. 198.

2. pp. 56. 20 and 207. 12.

In spite of all these pitfalls the 'Black Book of Chirk' contains an immense amount of invaluable information; and by the time it is exhausted much of the social history of Early Wales will have been re-written. One instance out of many may be cited as witness to its value in this respect. As far as I am aware, no one has published a serious study of the military organisation of Early Wales; and one may echo the words of Eugene O'Curry about the Military Education of Early Ireland when he says "There is less of direct information on this subject to be found amongst the wreck of ancient national records which have come down to us, than could be wished; and that much of what has been confidently taken for granted . . . belongs to the domain not of fact, but of mere assumption."<sup>1</sup> The Gododin—that early song of mead and might—says a great deal of armies and war but its rich vocabulary affords little definite information upon the subject. True, there is only one sentence in the B. B. Ch. which sheds additional light on our early military organisation, yet when that is cleared from the misconceptions clinging to it, the value of it becomes apparent at once. The text says Gwynwyr o wlat arall a trayano ac argluyd o delyir eu bot yn lladron gwerth (83.1). A. Owen says that this term gwynwyr "appears to signify 'religious' or

1. Manners and Customs of the Ancient Irish, II. 353.

'procurators' who wandered about the country under the pretext of collecting alms for religious purposes."<sup>1</sup> Later MSS. manipulated the word so that it appeared to be the mutated form of cwynwyr = plaintiffs. I know of nothing to justify A. Owen's note, and the ingenuity of the scribes suggests that the term was no longer understood. When it is realised that the gwyn of gwynwyr is the Welsh word corresponding to the Irish fian it is seen that here we have some important material for that unwritten chapter on military organisation. O'Curry adds his authority to that of Keating when he speaks of "the famous Militia of the Third Century, commonly called the Fianna Eireann, who obtained such a lasting fame under the command of the celebrated Finn Mac Cumhaill."<sup>2</sup> Joyce says "At different periods of our early history the kings had in their service bodies of militia, who underwent a yearly course of training, and who were at call like a standing army whenever the monarch required them. The most celebrated of these were the 'Red Branch Knights' of about the time of the Incarnation, and the 'Fianna or Fena of Erin' who flourished in the third century."<sup>3</sup>

Dr. Kuno Meyer, however, in his 'Fianaigeacht'<sup>4</sup> has collected all the reliable information afforded by Irish MSS. and early native sources concerning the use and meaning of this word fian, its derivatives and compounds. He says "In its stricter sense fian denoted a larger or smaller band of roving warriors, who joined for the purpose of making war on their own account. This was called dul for fianas (fenidecht). They were, however, not mere robbers or marauders. Indeed their mode of warfare was considered honourable and lawful, and is so recognised in the laws." This description of them seems to correspond well with the entry in the B. B. Ch., and it is clear that the gwynwyr of the B. B. Ch. is the same as the kwynwyr of R.B. II. which was known to the translator of Dares Phrygius as a technical term equivalent to the Latin conquisituri. Stokes<sup>1</sup> says that **vein* which he regards as the prehistoric form of fian meant 'streben, sich mühen' and connects it with the Latin venāri (see also Walde under venor). Dr. Meyer, however, proves that originally it was the name of a tribe or race; but that the usual meaning among the Irish was 'war.' It appears to me that this gwyn occurs often in our early literature and that it is the key to many words sadly misinterpreted. The word gwynyeith, or gwyniaeth (notwithstanding the assertion that it was borrowed from Latin) appears to me to be a derivative of this formed like the fenidecht above, and that it means 'a band of warriors joining in making war.' e.g. eingyl yghygor gwelattor arwydon. gwynyeith ar saesson. B.Tal. 2. 28. Gorau gwaith gwynniaeth ai gyweithyt Pan gedwis i wyneb heb gywilyt. MA. 141a. 38. By mistaking this gwyn for gwyn 'white, blessed' Welsh translators have been making saints by violence; and they have placed a halo round the head of Sir Kai though his whole life is in revolt against it. In our early literature Sir Kai is known as Kei guin or Kei wyn and it has usually been translated as 'Blessed Kai' (see Lady Guest, Trans.), but if the numerous references to Sir Kai in the W.B. or R.B. be brought together it will be seen how unlikely it is that his contemporaries called him 'blessed'; and how posterity has made him saintly beyond his dreams or desire perhaps. According to the R.B. Kei is:

1. Urkeltischer Sprachschatz, p. 265.

- Churlish and is rebuked for discourtesy. p. 105, 1-4.
 Angry and stiff-necked towards Arthur and refuses to speak to him henceforth, or help him. p. 134.
 Very ill-mannered and churlish to Gwenhuyvar who tells him he deserves hanging. p. 170.
 Behaves brutally towards the defenceless dwarf couple. p. 198.
 He is sarcastic to Peredur. p. 198.
 Insults Gwalchmai in a disgraceful manner. pp. 212-3.
 And is censured by Arthur. p. 205.

I can find nothing in his life to justify the epithet 'blessed'; but everywhere we find him first in danger and snuffing battle from afar. Gentle, courteous, cavalierly Gwalchmai might be called 'blessed' but Sir Kai never; and I have little doubt that by calling him 'Warrior Kai' or 'Champion Kai' I am restoring him the title he won through many a furious combat. A long list might be compiled of derivatives of this gwyn—abstract nouns, diminutives, place-names, and names of persons from L.L., B.B.C., W.B., B.An., etc. to show how widely used this word was, but the above instances must suffice here.

In preparing the glossary I have endeavoured to rely to the utmost on texts, published and unpublished, and little use has been made of the glossaries of Moses Williams and Anuerin Owen or the various attempts at translating the Welsh Laws. The dictionaries of Dr. Pughe and Dr. Davies were consulted and anything taken from them is duly noted. I made sparing use of Dr. Silvan Evan's dictionary, for I knew from experience that his selection of quotations was made upon, what appeared to me to, a very arbitrary plan, and was far from being exhaustive of any one text or period. It was inevitable that we should have quotations in common, for apart from some MSS. all my sources were open to him. This is not said to belittle one iod the work of previous labourers in this field ; for there are none I admire more, insomuch as my work has taught me to sympathise genuinely with them and appreciate their difficulties. I was anxious to add as much as possible to our knowledge of Mediæval Welsh Law rather than to rearrange the work of previous labourers. The Irish words have been inserted for the sake of young students in the University of Wales who may use it, in the hope that it may lead some of them to explore for themselves this enchanting and fruitful field ; for the study of Welsh is impossible without it, and had I known my Irish better the glossary would be much improved.

Because of the irregular orthography of the text, the glossary has been arranged according to the pronunciation of the words rather than their written form. The leading words in square brackets [ ] are not in the text but are taken from other mediæval texts.

Though the work is so slight, insomuch as it is my first, I want to couple with it my sincere gratefulness to all my teachers in Celtic, my gratitude to Prof. Sir E. Anwyl for allowing me to worry him often ; and to Dr. J. Gwenogvryn Evans, not only for the text as a basis of my work, but for letting me plunder him often with always an encouragement to plunder him more.

I desire also to record my obligations to the Publications Committee for undertaking such a troublesome task ; and to their Secretary, to the Printers and Reader for taking such great pains themselves, leaving me nothing but my own mistakes to correct.

Dr. Strachan while he was yet with us had expressed his willingness to have it dedicated to him. Now this little record of apprenticeship seems so trivial to dedicate to the memory of one so great, but he loved the work so fervently, worked so mercilessly, succeeded so well, yet withal he was so humble that he was glad of the least help, and in that spirit it is dedicated to his memory.

Ll.MS. 116, p. 111. As far as we have seen, apart from two or three proper names (cilydd canhastyr a chanastyr canllaw. W.B. col. 461.5) this occurs only in the expression cyhyryn canastyr. This has been translated "hundred perplexities" (A.L.I 246; Med.Law. 270) "hundred recurrences or junctions," Pughe; but it appears to us, notwithstanding the Latin gloss quoted above, that the meaning was originally "receiver or taker (of the contraband meat)." Canastyr is evidently regarded in a general sense as equivalent to canllaw, and the fine for receiving or taking this contraband meat extended to the hundredth hand or receiver. The word appears to have been borrowed from the Latin astur. According to Thurneysen (Walde, sub. astur) astur "a hawk," is from acceptor, and Körting (sub. astur) says that acceptor, "a receiver," appears in popular language for accipiter. Diez also says (sub. Astore): Wohl mag die lingua rustica an acceptor von accipere gedacht haben, als sie das mit diesem verbum ganz unverwandte accipiter umformte. The astyr of cilydd canhastyr however looks more like the Irish astur "a journey."

A.O. takes this as a derivative of kygwn 'joint' and translates k. derwen by 'gnarled oak.' K. derw occurs in Med. M. p. 28, but without any means of establishing its meaning. Kegyn occurs often in Welsh='hedge' or 'ridge' and k. derwen might mean 'a small dwarfed oak growing on a hedge.' cf. bet cecin ir alt. This cegyn appears to be borrowed from the Lat. cacumen (cf. testun<testimonium). cacumen translates the Ir. clad 'an earthen rampart or dyke.' (see Index of Hiberno-Latin Words. Trip, Life of St. Patrick) and was presumably borrowed in this sense into Welsh. "Dobhreth was a kinde of taxation or rent upon peasants when the king or his officers made circuit or progress with dogs and horses." Ll.MS. 68, p. 138. This appears to be formed from dof+rheith with dof=house. Prof. Thurneysen suggests (see Walde, under domo) that the Welsh dof, dofi spring from Lat. domare. It is possible however that dof is borrowed from domus and from its constant use in the genit. came like many other words to be used as an adj. It is difficult to say whether expressions like llysse dof, sage dof, etc. (Old Leech Book) preserve an earlier meaning or are a later development. dofaeth gentle, urbane (?) if it is=dof+faeth would be similarly formed. see D.G. ccxxix.13.

P.M.S. 27. *This word is usually translated 'blank' or 'holy' (A.L.I 131; II 273, 449; Pughe) because no legal business could be transacted during those days and because they were so closely associated with the great religious festivals. The variation in the written form of the expression suggests that the origin of the word was more or less forgotten. It appears to us that -on is the same word as the Ir. óin fasting (see Pass. Hom. p. 529) which was borrowed from Lat. ieiunium or rather from the form iāiunium or *ājūnium (see De Hib. under óin, aoin, óine, p. 161, and Walde under jejūnus) and that dydd-on is literally 'a day of fasting.' The vocalism of -on is not clear to me, but it is possible that it was influenced because dydon was evidently regarded as a plural. It appears to have survived in a curious form in colloquial Welsh till the last century. In the "Report of the Commissioner on Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," 1883, the following expression occurs in the report on Pwllheli, p. 123. This is written gwynwyr, cwynwyr, gofynwyr, mynwyr, and appears not to be always understood by the scribes. A.O. [A.L.I 255, note a] says: "This term appears to signify 'religious,' or 'procurators' who wandered about the country under the pretext of collecting alms for religious purposes." We do not know, however, of any text to support this. The word corresponds in form to the Ir. Fian, Fiana, which meant a 'band of roving warriors,' and the meaning suits the context here. It is almost certain that it is the same word as the kwynwyr 'recruiting officers' of Ystorya Dared. ef a anuones kwynwyr drwy holl roec. ac y gynnnull kedymdeithon megys y gellynt hwy vynet yn hyborth y ymlad a gwyrr troea. blwyd vehineit. A.L.I 534.ix. Hanerob reminds one of the word byrhwch 'small pig.' Cais floneg mochyn bychan a elwir mewn manau byrhwch. Med.M. p. 208 §560. Byrhwch is translated by Pughe 'a badger,' etc.; this is accepted by D.S.E. apparently on the authority of this text of Med.M. which appears to us impossible. It reminds us also of the difficult word mannuclenn in a specification of a dawn bwyd. L.L. xlv §3.3. The Editors regard this, rightly we think, as a dimin. of banw 'a sucking pig,' and the translation 'sheaf,' 'handful' (Lloyd 214, note 105) appears to us quite inadmissible. In that case it belongs to the same category as the English swine a dimin. of su and haner is confused with anner. Anner usually means in W. 'a young cow,' but the Ir. ainder 'a young woman' suggests that it had a wider application. X

Lat. jactus (Eng. jesses); so hwyedyc or hwyedyd appears to be equivalent to the Eng. goshawk (=goosehawk. Skeat). Hwyad is invariably translated in Welsh as 'duck' but the word itself = Lat. auca; Fr. oie goose. (Ped.I 56. Walde p. 86.) The oldest law codices do not mention hwyad and the later ones only just mention it as a domestic bird without giving the detailed series of prices, etc., as in the case of the goose and the hen. see A.L.I 718.xv. There is no doubt, however, that hwyad was one of the birds caught by the falcon, the famous passage in Peredur (W.B. col. 140.19) establishes it; but Chretien says, in describing this scene, "Véues les a et oies/Qu'eles s'en aloient bruiant." (see extracts. Celt.Stud.II p. 201) and Wolfram, "Artus valke al mite streich; da wol tusement gense lagen." (Ibid. 202.) leaving little doubt that hwyad=wildgoose. There is in Welsh a hwyedig = longus, prolongatus (Dr.D.) and the macropteron above seems to be a translation of this but hwyedyd is a different word. It is possible, however, that hwyedyc is a*

A.L.II 823.xii. Körtling gives a prov. form mudar from Lat. mūtāre and mudteyr, muteyr appear to be from the muter of the Lat. text quoted above likewise from mūtāre. mudteyr appears to have been resolved into the two words mud+teyr and regarded=termud, tremud, trimud, (tre-, ter-, tri=try. Ir. tar-). In the famous passage in R.B.I 117.24 gwalch trimut has always, I think, been translated 'thrice mewed falcon'; but so far as I* have seen the Laws in the detailed regulations concerning falcons nowhere recognise this 'thrice-mewed falcon.' Termud in M.A. 201b; 202a; 282b (notwithstanding Dr.D.) appears to be formed from these same elements; so also tremid M.A. 202b; 237a and apparently trimud which has the same meaning. see M.A. 221a; 252b; 257b; 267a. (With this last cf. triuawr. M.A. 254b. trillit. M.A. 290a. triphoenue. M.A. 313a). trimud then means 'thoroughly mewed.' see mud 2.

yeueu (?) the second yoke, a measure of 8 feet. 65.9. It corresponds to the eyl yeu of 59.11. The great variety of forms by which this yoke is called suggests that the original name was no longer quite intelligible to the scribes. Several MSS. have veieu as v.l. for 59.11 (= A.L.I 166) so for 65.9 (A.L.I 186). Meiau. L.W. 122; 139.3. mey yeu. Ll.MS. 174, p. 76.15. yn neiaf (leg. ueiaf (?)). Rep.MSS.I 954 §63. There is a ref. to y fevav a dolav in Ll.MS. 202.lxxix, while Ll.MS. 116, p. 105.5, has veinieu. This is always translated 'field yoke' (A.L.I 167, 186. W.P. 249, etc.) where mei would correspond to Ir. mag 'field,' 'plain'; we know, however, of very little evidence to support this. There appears to be a mei 'great' or 'greater' in Welsh unconnected with Mai 'May' or mai 'a field,' and corresponding rather with Ir. mag, maige 'great.' Mei is often applied in poetry to horses, and, as far as we can see, it means 'great' or 'powerful,' 'fit for war.' Meckid meibion Meigen meirch mei. M.A.67b.31. meirch mei meindwn. M.A.170b.11; 215a.50. Meiwyr 'soldiers,' may be another compound, though cad ar faes, and maes are common expressions for 'war' in Med. Welsh. Mei appears to be used in the sense of mawr with mwyr as comparative. Atvyd mei ar venei crei gyflogawt./Atvyd
